Background ▶

The covid-19 crisis has jolted leaders and organizers into action, accelerating trends that were already in play and triggering new ones. Amid the terrible human toll of the pandemic, some organizations are finding that by working differently they can rise to the occasion and help their employees, customers and even their communities. Two years ago, relatively few companies considered competencies in crisis management, enterprise agility, cost management, workforce resiliency, innovation or cash flow management as critically important to their business. Today however most companies are stretching themselves to make the ends meet. While no one can predict when or how the pandemic will end, the lessons these companies are learning as they organize for the future will give them clear advantages as the next normal takes shape.

In a recent white paper published online, consulting company McKinsey observed that five qualities will be critical for business leaders to find their way in new normal as the organizations recalibrate themselves in the post pandemic recovery phase. These five qualities dwells on organizations ability to resolve, be resilient, to return to normalcy at the soonest, to reimagine the business, and reform for the future. In this conference, we suggest to bring academicians, researchers, scholars and practicing professionals to deliberate and present their perspectives on how companies should reimagine their business model as they return to full throttle and they get ready to confront the challenges—and opportunities—of the next normal than those who do not.

The business landscape will likely look a lot different as economies and industries recover beyond the pandemic, the virus and its multiple variants. The pertinent issue here is to examine what specific challenges will businesses face, and how companies should strive to prosper in the recovery phase following the pandemic.

It must be borne in mind that one-size-fits-all plan may no longer hold good in the post pandemic phase. Every industry will face unique challenges. Some industries will be permanently damaged by what they have gone through. Other industries will benefit from changed conditions and attitudes. In any case, businesses that meet these changes with innovative thinking will have the best chance of prospering.

COVID-19 will lead to a significant change not only in the immediate term, but also in strategies, the ways of working and mindsets of decision-makers and customers. The government should immediately focus on three areas, job maintenance and creation, provision of a safety net for all citizens and resource mobilization to support these goals.

Against this backdrop, two interesting questions for business research emerge here:

What are different dynamic capabilities and agile business practices that have helped firms in overcoming the challenges associated with the new normal?

How can these firms institutionalize these dynamic capabilities and agile practices that they have employed during the new normal?

ABOUT MUMBAI ▶

Mumbai, formerly called Bombay, is a sprawling, densely populated city on India's west coast. On the Mumbai Harbour waterfront stands the iconic Gateway of India stone arch, built by the British Raj in 1924. Offshore, nearby Elephanta Island holds ancient cave temples dedicated to Shiva.

The city is also famous as the heart of the Hindi-language Bollywood film industry.

The seven islands that came to constitute Mumbai were home to communities of fishing colonies. For centuries, the islands were under the control of successive indigenous empires before being ceded to the Portuguese and subsequently to the British East India Company when in 1661 King Charles II married the Portuguese Catherine of Braganza, and as part of her dowry, Charles received the ports of Tangier and seven islands of Bombay. During the mid-18th century, Bombay was reshaped by the Hornby Vellard project, which undertook reclamation of the area between the seven islands from the sea. Along with the construction of major roads and railways, the reclamation project, completed in 1845, transformed Bombay into a major seaport on the Arabian Sea. Bombay in the 19th century was characterized by economic and educational development.

During the early 20th century it became a strong base for the Indian independence movement. Upon India's independence in 1947 the city was incorporated into Bombay State. In 1960, following the Samyukta Maharashtra movement, a new state of Maharashtra was created with Bombay as the capital. The city was renamed as Mumbai in 1996.
